

Forman Watkins Welcomes Accomplished Attorney Adriana Houlton to the Team

The Firm is proud to announce the addition of Adriana Houlton as a partner to its team of experienced litigators. With over 15 years of experience in toxic tort litigation, including serving as national coordinating counsel for a major chemical manufacturer, Adriana brings a unique combination of scientific insights and legal acumen that will enhance the Firm's ability to deliver exceptional results for its clients.

A graduate of South Texas College of Law, Adriana has established herself as a tenacious advocate with a proven track record in complex litigation, class actions, and products liability. Her scientific background, cultivated during her time at the Department of Epidemiology at M.D. Anderson Cancer Center, provides her with a distinct advantage in navigating the intricate interplay of science and law in toxic tort cases.

"Adriana is a remarkable addition to our team," said Tim Gray, Partner at FormanWatkins. "Her extensive experience, strategic mindset, and passion for both science and the law make her a formidable advocate for our clients. We are confident that her expertise will contribute to the exceptional service we provide our clients."

In her role at FormanWatkins, Adriana will continue to build on her legacy of success, leveraging her skills in developing and cross-examining expert witnesses across multiple disciplines, large-scale discovery, trial preparation, and negotiations. Her dedication to achieving favorable outcomes and her ability to build strong relationships within defense teams and with opposing counsel underscore her value to both the Firm and its clients.