Michael believes that being a lawyer is one of the few jobs where problem solving and critical thinking go hand-in-hand. As a former process engineer, Michael is a critical thinker who provides a unique problem solving approach for each and every one of his clients. He also enjoys working diligently to personally get to know his clients and set goals together as a team. Michael maintains a level head, methodically analyzes and actively tackles every challenge that arises, believing it leads to professional and personal growth. There is nothing Michael would rather be than a lawyer at the service of the people, so clients can always rest assured that with his representation, their case and their business will be well taken care of.
